

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

this character. Everywhere the author has presented the facts in dignified manner to show his readers what the state of knowledge is at the present time, and what the possible rôle of these findings may be in social phenomena. The first two chapters may be especially commended as excellent general résumés of the topics treated therein, and are well worth careful reading and thought by special workers in social science.

W. L. TOWER

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

Career and Education of Crippled Children. By EDITH REEVES. New York: Survey Associates, 1914. Pp. 252.

A recent report of the Russell Sage Foundation is based upon a study of 37 representative institutions for crippled children. The number visited includes hospitals, special schools, and asylum homes. Both private and state institutions are considered. The points given particular attention in the survey are: (1) physical care, in such diverse aspects as provisions for surgical aid and for "home atmosphere"; (2) educational facilities. There is detailed description of each institution.

E. L. TALBERT

UNIVERSITY OF CINCINNATI

The Social Problem. A Constructive Analysis. By CHARLES A. ELLWOOD. The Citizen's Library of Economics, Politics, and Sociology. Edited by RICHARD T. ELY. New York: Macmillan, 1915. Pp. xii+255.

Professor Ellwood has performed the rare feat of discussing a wide range of tangled and difficult problems in a way that will enable readers of ordinary intelligence to follow him without falling into confusion, and, what is still more notable, without imagining that they have exhausted the subject. The author is radical in his analysis without being premature in his conclusions. His readers must get the impression that principles are much more conclusive than programs, that social problems are not likely to be solved wholesale, and that it is the part of good citizens to do their particular work upon honor, while adjusting their plans to a large survey of other men's work. More clear and stimulating thinking is seldom condensed into so few pages.

ALBION W. SMALL